Colégio Europeu Astoria dá os primeiros passos para a mudança na educação do século XXI

Foi no passado dia 1 de fevereiro na Faculdade de Letras da Universidade de Lisboa que se celebrou uma conferência acerca dos “Primeiros passos para a mudança na educação do séc. XXI”. Uma conferência organizada pelo Colégio Europeu Astoria e que, pela primeira vez em Portugal, contou com o testemunho do professor Howard Gardner, o autor da Teoria das Inteligências Múltiplas. Entre várias temáticas expostas falou-se na forma de estimular o pensamento e o desenvolvimento de competências, que promoviu o debate em torno de um tema tão prioritário como a formação e a aprendizagem, focando a articulação do uso da teoria das inteligências múltiplas com o ensino bilingue (português / inglês).

No decorrer deste evento Howard Gardner salientou a importância do ensino bilingue nas escolas:

“These days it is increasingly important to the knowledge of several languages, there are different ways to teach them, depending on the age group, applying in many ways: interactive games, singing and social conversation. The intelligence is a potential in our body, because it have a potential biological where we enjoy in different ways, so that the information process is more easier.”

O Colégio Astoria contou com a presença de parceiros internacionais através do Webinar que participaram neste evento, instituições estas na área da educação pública e privada do Reino Unido, Estados Unidos da América, Grécia, Turquia, Romênia, Holanda, Finlândia, Suécia, entre outros. Ainda presentes estiveram alguns membros do Colégio Astoria, para uma melhor compreensão de como são aplicadas todas estas técnicas, que no final se resumem a um excelente resultado com casos de sucesso comprovados entre os seus alunos e famílias.

IT'S A WRAP! FINAL SCHOOL PARTY 2018

BY MS KATERINA

Preschool newsletters are one of the most efficient and reliable ways to keep parents updated on all that is happening with their kids and the school. They're definitely a better alternative for weekly parent and teacher meetings. Whether it's in an email or a letter format, newsletters are a great way to connect with your preschool's community.

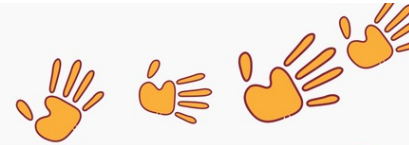

Of course, before you begin, you must first gather the information you want to include in your newsletter. Once you've got that pat down, you can start playing around with the layout. Go for a pared-back design that won't look too crowded or busy. You can also choose to use punchy colors to liven things up and catch the parents' attention. Make sure you have just the right amount of white space, but don't be afraid to toss in some fun graphics."

Make your newsletter an easy and pleasurable read by choosing a simple yet engaging layout. Feel free to feature high-quality photos of the kids enjoying a fun classroom activity or an exciting school event. Parents appreciate seeing their children on paper! You can also add some cute graphics and use your school colors to finish the look.

"Parents get most of the information about the kids' schedule and activities from your newsletter, so make it short and sweet as they usually get overwhelmed by lengthy ones. Remember to put the most important details, like a calendar of upcoming school events, on the front page where they can't be missed. You can devote a space for some of the kids' major milestones and achievements, as well as the highlights of what they learned in the past month.

It would also be a good idea to encourage the parents to get involved and contribute to the newsletter. If they discovered some useful parenting tips and articles, they can use your newsletter to share it to the rest. Another great addition would be a rundown of your school's menu to let the parents know what their kid is eating. Just get creative and make your newsletter an open and informative space for both kids and guardians! "
